

Helge Kragh is emeritus professor of history of science at the Niels Bohr Institute, University of Copenhagen, Denmark, and has previously held positions at Cornell University (USA), University of Oslo (Norway), and Aarhus University (Denmark).

He has written extensively on the history of the physical sciences including physics, chemistry and astronomy. Much of his work has been devoted to the historical development of cosmology. He is presently engaged in a project on the words and language of science in a historical perspective.