

Tomáš Holub - a member of the Bank Board of the Czech National Bank. Associate professor in economic theory, teaching monetary economics and international macroeconomics at Charles University in Prague. He undertook study internships at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. and the London

School of Economics and Political Science in London. In the past: adviser to the vice-governor/governor, CNB and Executive Director of the Monetary and Statistics Department. He regularly publishes articles on inflation targeting, exchange rate issues, central bank independence and transparency, central bank finances and price convergence in domestic and foreign economic journals. He is a member of the Czech Economics Society and served as its president in 2006–2007.